

In-service recruiter: know your options

By Senior Airman Allison M. Boehm
2nd Bomb Wing Public Affairs

Active-duty Airmen who are considering separating from the military have options, and the in-service recruiter at Barksdale, home of Air Force Global Strike Command, is working to ensure those individuals are fully aware of all possible options before that decision is made.

Master Sgt. Daniel Sorrentino, Barksdale AFB in-service recruiter, understands the process active-duty Airmen complete once they decide to separate from the Air Force and works to help educate Airmen on the Palace Front and Palace Chase programs.

"Deciding it is time to separate can come with its own set of challenges," Sergeant Sorrentino said. "Everyone comes in for one reason or another; no one is forced just as everyone has their own reason for separating. These programs give the Airmen a chance to continue their military career and be part of this family. It's a win-win for the applicant and the Air Force."

In-service recruiters provide many valuable services to Airmen, but their primary function is to transfer active-duty members to the Air Force Reserve.

"I am responsible to meet with all individuals who are separating from Air Force active duty," Sergeant Sorrentino said. "The Palace Front Program and the Palace Chase Program allows an active duty Airmen to transfer over to the Air Force Reserves."

During the briefing, Sergeant Sorrentino shares information about opportunities to transition from active duty Air Force into the Air Force Reserve through the Palace Chase and Palace Front programs.

The Palace Front Program is for Airmen who have reached their normal date of separation and wants to transfer to the Air

The grand opening for the new location of the Airman's Attic took place March 17 after months of preparation and renovation.

Prior to the move, the Airman's Attic was small and had trouble accommodating the merchandise as well as customers.

"The biggest benefit of the new location is how much more space we have," said Stefanie Markin, Airman's Attic manager. "Airmen and their families can be much more comfortable while shopping now."

The Airman's Attic provides an invaluable service to Airmen and their families stationed at Barksdale, home of Air Force Global Strike Command, by providing secondhand merchandise ranging from uniforms to children's toys free of charge. This resource is made possible by the generous peer-to-peer donations received from Team Barksdale.

Due to their constant and continuing support of the Airman's Attic program, Airman 1st Class John Meyer and his wife, Amanda, were asked to join Col. Timothy Fay, 2nd Bomb Wing commander, to cut the ribbon during the grand opening ceremony.

"The Airman's Attic provided so much to our family when we first got here, from baby clothes to furniture for our new place, so we try to give back every chance we get," Meyer said. "This new location will give (the Airman's Attic) much more space to be more organized and display more merchandise."

In addition to providing more space, the new location is closer to the dorms, providing easier access to the people who will benefit from it the most.

The Airman's Attic is now located in the old clothing sales building located on the corner of Wilbur Wright Road and Kenney Avenue and is open Tuesdays and Thursdays from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Attendees of the reopening ceremony for the Airman's Attic mingle and explore the new facility on Barksdale. The Airman's Attic is now located in the old clothing sales building located on the corner of Wilbur Wright Road and Kenney Avenue.

The Airman's Attic on Barksdale resumed normal operations March 17 following a relocation to the old clothing sales building. The Airman's Attic provides Airmen with secondhand merchandise ranging from uniforms to children's toys and clothing free-of-charge.

A good wingman is always 'with'

By Maj. Jason Whittle
 65th Contracting Squadron

LAJES FIELD, Azores — I have three small kids, and I still haven't been issued a parenting manual. I've changed a lot of diapers and still struggle.

You'll frequently see my children in mismatched clothes. That's because it was Daddy's turn to dress them. When I cook dinner, it looks more like a college kid's menu — a peanut butter and jelly sandwich, a banana, a cheese stick and some gummy bears. When I'm tasked to clean the peanut butter and jelly from my kids' hands, face, ears and hair, you can bet I'll miss most of it (incidentally, PB&J makes great hair gel).

Momma spends a lot of time fixing what I've goofed up. But all I have to do is lay on the floor and the kids come swarming, excited to jump on Daddy. Fortunately, their love isn't based on my skill — whew! They just love to be with me. Sometimes I'm the punching bag, or trampoline, or even the tackling dummy. Sometimes I get to be their pillow too. My kids just want to be with me.

We're social creatures, hard-wired to spend time with one another, help each other, talk, listen and enjoy the company of our friends and family.

Social networking sites help us stay in touch with friends, no matter the distance between us. Our cities and towns are full of people, and we spend our days surrounded by others. Yet many people still feel alone, unconnected and dissatisfied. We send e-mails to our family members, who may be in the same house.

Even phone calls have been replaced by easier and less personal communication methods. Instead of visiting our friends, we text them. We exchange conversation and company for a few typed words sent from phone to phone.

There are countless books on leadership, parenthood and even friendship. We're taught to be good wingmen.

I'm going to save you some time. There is a foundational truth that runs through all of these books and classes: "with." A good leader is "with" his people, talking, listening, observing and simply being there — management by walking around. Good parents are "with" their children, playing, running, wrestling, and simply being there (even if I often fail to completely clean the peanut butter out of my kids' hair).

During dark times in my life, through the pain of loss or rejection, my friends have comforted me by being "with" me. I don't remember anything they said, but I remember their presence when I needed them. And your wingmen, they're by your side; they've got your back no matter the situation.

Put down the laptop, turn off the TV, and go be with people. Talk, listen and care.

"Half the battle is showing up." Sometimes it's the whole battle.

Force Reserve. The Palace Chase Program allows Airmen to separate earlier than their date of separation as long as at least half of their initial enlistment is served.

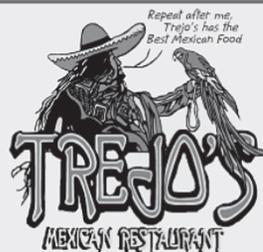

Airmen who attended his briefing see the benefit.

"Being informed on all the options available to me really allowed me to make a fully-informed decision that was in my best interest," said Senior Airman Shawn Carvin, 26th Operational Weather Squadron.

Sergeant Sorrentino says, the Air Force Reserve has many of the same benefits that active duty does which includes education, on-base privileges, medical and dental coverage, pay, travel, promotions, recognition, and a sense of belonging to a team and urges Airmen to remember, "The Air Force Reserve is always looking for highly qualified people."

Enlisted reserve briefings take place every Monday at 8 a.m. and 1 p.m.

Residents compete for Yard of the Month honors

By Danielle Hill
dhill4@gannett.com

The Landings at Barksdale residents will soon be competing for Yard of the Month.

The program, which begins in April, will judge who has the nicest yard in each of the housing areas.

"Each month, the Chief's Group selects winners by driving through the neighborhoods on base and selecting the homes with the most curb appeal," said Starla Wilson, community director for the Landings at Barksdale.

Winners will be notified on the 15th of each month, and they will receive a gift card to Home Depot and have a sign displayed in their yard for the month. A winner will be selected from Main Base Enlisted, Main Base Officer, Heritage Heights and Liberty Heights.

"We encourage all residents to participate in the program. Keeping your yards clean and beautifully maintained allows for an enjoyable view for the residents and base personnel as they commute to vari-

Wilson also wanted to remind residents that "being a responsible pet owner is also a large part of keeping your yard beautiful."
